

Racial Equity Action Plan Methodology

In the fall of 2021, OERJ launched the Equity and Racial Justice Cohorts to develop city departments' capacity to create Racial Equity Action Plans (REAPS). This is a key institutional change strategy to operationalize racial equity into the core business of government.

Developing the Capacity to Create REAPs

OERJ led three cohort experiences that supported 26 department teams in developing Racial Equity Action Plans and building the internal capacity to sustain racial equity work. Content and training were funded by the Chicago Department of Public Health (CDPH) and designed by the Government Alliance on Race and Equity (GARE), a national organization that provides racial equity training and best practices across the country.

For each team, commissioners selected 4-15 staff who cover the breadth of the department's core functions. Teams attended monthly training sessions. Between sessions, teams organized internal staff to complete assignments and attended technical assistance meetings with OERJ and GARE. Department training covered foundational racial equity concepts around:

- The role of government – building understanding on how government has created racial inequities and the role of government in driving racial equity.
- Leading and communicating about racial equity – providing hands-on exercises to discuss the leadership required to move organizational change within government and tools to communicate about racial equity internally and externally.
- Racial Equity Tools – introducing and applying GARE's Racial Equity Tool to develop Racial Equity Action Plans that identify key areas to advance racial equity and assign resources to drive change in governmental processes and the outcomes we seek.

Departments had the opportunity to showcase their learning and communicate their commitment to racial equity at a culminating symposium. The Mayor, Deputy Mayors, department leadership, and Equity Advisory Council members were in attendance.

Drafting REAPs

The core deliverable of the training was building departmental Racial Equity Action Plans (REAPs). A REAP is a multi-year strategic plan that articulates how departments will work to improve equitable outcomes in their core work (service delivery, policy, programs, finance, HR, etc.). OERJ gave teams the following guidance for developing their department's REAP:

- A citywide vision statement. All plans are aiming toward a city where all people and all communities have power, are free from oppression and are strengthened by equitable access to resources, environments and opportunities that promote optimal health and well-being. This language comes from CDPH's Healthy Chicago 2025 Plan.
- 13 priority areas with articulated desired results we want to see for all Chicagoans. These priority areas largely focus on population level outcomes drawn from existing citywide plans to advance racial equity (e.g., Healthy Chicago 2025, We Will Chicago, the Climate Action Plan, and Our City Our Safety). OERJ hoped that this will increase coordination across departments in these key areas. The remaining priority areas focus on key institutional processes needed to drive toward more equitable outcomes.
- A REAP template to ensure consistency. All departments were asked to develop REAPs that addressed three different priority areas, including at least one aligned to an outcome and one to a process. This requirement ensured that departments created plans that aligned to the City's definition of equity, which states that equity is both an outcome and a process. Department selections are included below.

Departments then had time to finalize their plans post-cohort. Commissioners signed off on final plans before publication. All REAPs were published by Quarter 2, 2023.

Reviewing/Evaluating REAPs

The Equity Advisory Council recommended setting up a process to evaluate department REAPs so the public could better understand the quality and potential impact of the REAPs. The goal of these evaluations was to acknowledge transformative work included within these plans and provide constructive ways to strengthen plans that are more transactional. For this reason, plans were evaluated on a scale of transactional to transformative.

Transactional approaches are issue-based; they focus on short-term gains for communities most impacted but leave the existing structure in place. Transformational approaches cut across multiple institutions, focus on policy and organizational culture, and alter the ways institutions operate.

OERJ, members of the Equity Advisory Council, and close community partners assessed plans based on the rubric below.

To be clear, moving toward transformation takes time. Every step, whether transactional or transformative, counts toward our greater goal of driving racial equity.
