PROCUREMENT HISTORY (INCLUDING FUTURE PROCUREMENT OBJECTIVES)

1. Describe the requirement and how it evolved from initial planning to its status.

The Bomb Squad utilizes X-ray as one of the basic methods to determine the contents of suspect IED's without moving or manipulating the object. Our current X-ray systems use an X-ray generator that imprints an image on a plate that must then be retrieved and developed. An Open Vision system is a handheld or robot deployed system that produces an instant image in real time. The contents of a container can be examined in real time from different angles as the system is moved around the container. This provides a rapid assessment of the container.

2. Is this a first time requirement or a continuation of previous procurement from the same source? If so, explain the procurement history.

This is a first time requirement.

3. Explain attempts made to competitively bid the requirement. (Attach copy of notices and list of sources contacted)

No other company manufactures these products.

4. Describe all research done to find other sources. (List other cities contacted, companies in the industry contacted, professional organizations, periodicals and other publications used).

There is no other portable real time x-ray system on the market. There are other real time x-ray systems such as Fox Ray and RTR-4. However these systems use a separate x-ray generator and imaging screen and laptop computer to acquire and display the image.

The foXray system, manufactured by Vidsco Ltd., comes with a standard imaging screen 7.5 x 10 inches. A larger screen, measuring 11 x 14.5 inches, is available as an option but requires a separate carrying case. The foXray system is connected to the imaging screen via cable, and RF is not available for the system. Furthermore, the x-ray image must be viewed on the system's screen, which would require the Explosives Technician to monitor two screens during an incident. As opposed to the Open Vision system, which transmits the image to the robot's monitor via RF.

The RTR-4 system, manufactured by Science Applications International Corp., does offer a larger viewing screen. However, the image must be viewed with that screen, as opposed to the Open Vision system which transmits the image to the robot's monitor via RF. Additionally, both the RTR-4 and foXray systems are computer-based, which require boot-up. The Open Vision system is not computer-based, and enables immediate deployment.

International Association of Bomb Technicians and Investigators Great Lakes Bomb Technicians Association

5. Explain future procurement objectives. Is this a one-time request or will future requests be made for doing business with the same source?

Future purchases may be made up to 5 units within 5 years.

6. Explain whether or not future competitive bidding is possible. If not, why not?

Future bidding will be possible if these products are made by other companies in the future.

ESTIMATED COST “ ESTIMATED COST “

1. What is the estimated cost for this requirement (or for each contract, if multiple awards contemplated)? What is the funding source?

The cost is based upon approved quote. The funding source is the 2006 Buffer Zone Protection Program grant.

DNA

3. Explain the basis for estimating the cost and what assumptions were made and/or data used (ie. Budgeted amount, previous contract price, current catalog or cost proposal from firms solicited, engineering or in-house estimate, etc).

An Open Vision system is a handheld or robot deployed system that produces an instant image in real time. This product will be used by Explosives Technicians to perform rapid diagnostics of suspect IED's. The Open Vision system will allow Explosives Technicians to 'clear' suspect items in crowded areas such as rapid transit stations, public venues (Taste of Chicago, Sports events, etc) so that facilities can be returned to normal functions with minimal disruption. Our current system which utilizes an X-ray generator and image plate which must be placed on either side of the item. The Explosives Technician then backs away and initiates the generator which produces an image on the plate. The plate must then be retrieved and processed via a processing unit connected to a laptop computer. Normally this system is transported in our Response Vehicles. This procedure produces an image on the laptop which can be enhanced and manipulated. This is a good system which produces a useful image. However, this is time consuming and can present logistical obstacles in transporting the image back to the vehicle for processing and interpretation. The open Vision system can be used in those situations where a rapid diagnosis is the priority. This system is also capable of being deployed via robot and is designed to be compatible with all of our robots.
